Five Physical Security Myths We Still Hear From New Zealand Businesses

MYTH 1 OF 5

“More cameras mean better security.”

THE REALITY

Without clear coverage goals, sensible retention settings and someone reviewing footage, cameras only record what already happened.

PRACTICAL CHECK

Do you have coverage goals, sensible retention settings, and someone who reviews footage?

FIVE PHYSICAL SECURITY MYTHS

MYTH 2 OF 5

“A locked door is a secure door.”

THE REALITY

That stops being true once the closer wears out, the strike drifts out of alignment or staff prop the door open on a warm afternoon.

PRACTICAL CHECK

Walk your doors: worn closers, misaligned strikes, doors propped open.

MYTH 3 OF 5

“Monitored means someone will turn up.”

THE REALITY

Monitoring and response are different services, and many businesses don’t know which one they’re paying for.

PRACTICAL CHECK

Read your contract: are you paying for monitoring, response, or both?

FIVE PHYSICAL SECURITY MYTHS

MYTH 4 OF 5

“We’re too small to be a target.”

THE REALITY

Opportunistic offenders look for easy access, not company size.

PRACTICAL CHECK

Look at your site the way an opportunist would: where is access easy?

FIVE PHYSICAL SECURITY MYTHS

MYTH 5 OF 5

“Once it’s installed, it’s done.”

THE REALITY

Systems drift as staff change, firmware ages and fit-outs move walls.

PRACTICAL CHECK

Test what’s actually on site rather than trusting what’s on the drawing.
